THE scene of the "Domino Noir" is laid in Madrid. A young Spanish lady of rank and wealth, although the inmate of a convent and about to be made its Abbess, is in the habit of attending balls in the disguise of a black domino. At one of these entertainments given by the Queen of Spain, she has met a young Count, and having fallen in love with him secretly protects his career. A year elapses and they are fated to meet again under identical circumstances, ANGELA, having escaped once more, attended by her faithful friend BRIGITTA, to join in the festivities of the Queen's ball. The Count, hopeless of ever meeting his fair incognita, is hovering on the brink of marriage with the French Ambassador's daughter when this accidental encounter takes place. On seeing her he feigns sleep in an arm-chair, and hears from the fair one's lips an avowal of her feelings, which she moreover marks by leaving her bouquet by his side as a token and last gage of a passion which must be stifled in her forthcoming solemn engagements. HORACE, soon after singles her out from the crowd, and after pouring out the avowal of his intense passion, challenges her to an equal confession by producing the bouquet and revealing that he overheard her. Angela tells him that an inseparable barrier parts them for ever, but that she will ever be his tender and devoted friend. Horace persists in his suit, and begs to be allowed once more to see her face, when the clocks strike twelve, the hour at which Angela had appointed to slip from the ball with her companion. Brigitta, having been deceived as to the hour by Horace's friend JULIAN, has however gone without her, and Angela is obliged to make her way back to the convent alone as best she can. In attempting this she becomes so bewildered and terrified that she ventures to knock for shelter at a house whence a friendly light is seen glimmering. It is the bachelor residence of Count Julian, and his housekeeper having prepared supper for her master and his friends, is also waiting the arrival of her friend the porter of the convent. Angela is kindly received by the duenna, and to shield her from discovery is invested in the habiliments of a country girl, a niece of the housekeeper, INESILLA by name, whose arrival had been daily expected. In this garb Angela waits on the bachelor's party, which comprises Horace. In the pretended Inesilla, who is induced to sing for the amusement of Julian and his guests, Horace discovers to his intense bewilderment his incognita. Pressed by him to confess her identity she manages to escape after frightening the porter of the convent, who takes her, in the domino she has resumed, for an apparition, and surrenders the convent keys to her demand. Angela thus reaching safely her saintly retreat, now prepares to assume the rule of the community of nuns, and a large attendance of friends assemble to witness the solemn ceremony. Horace arrives at the convent at the same moment. The lady to whom he was in a measure engaged being an inmate there he has come to intimate the impossibility of their intended marriage, and thus hears the voice of his incognita amidst the chant of the nuns advancing, and soon after beholds Angela arrayed for her inauguration. In the midst of the astonishment caused by this fresh mystery, a letter reaches the convent from the Queen, appointing another Abbess, releasing Angela from her vows and enjoining her to choose a husband without delay. Thus unexpectedly Horace finds himself crowned with happiness at the very moment when hope seemed for ever lost, for Angela loses no time in proffering her hand and love to him in presence of the entire assembly.

Sf*

The musical score consists of three staves. The top staff is for the Soprani and Contralti voices, indicated by a soprano clef and a key signature of one sharp. The middle staff is for the Tenori and Bassi voices, indicated by a bass clef and a key signature of one sharp. The bottom staff is for the Piano, indicated by a treble clef. The music is in common time (indicated by a '2' over a '4'). The vocal parts begin with a dynamic of 'S' (seconda volta, dopo l'aria di Lord Elfort.) and 'Tenori e Bassi'. The piano part begins with a dynamic of 'Sf' (Prima volta). The vocal parts sing in unison, while the piano part provides harmonic support. The lyrics are repeated twice, followed by a section where the piano part continues alone.
